

Associate Professor Katrina Anderson

Associate Professor Katrina Anderson is a general practitioner who has experience across all levels of generalist training both urban and rural. She currently has leadership roles with medical student teaching at the Australian National University Medical School, and the prevocational placements in General Practice in the ACT and SENSW region. She was a Director of Training with Coast City Country GP Training for 8 years and has been a medical educator for twenty years. She has also been involved in junior doctor education at the Canberra Hospital for ten years. A/Prof Anderson has a special interest in supervisor education and training. She has research interests around the scholarship of teaching specifically looking at the vertical integration of training, the health and wellbeing of doctors and the development of leadership skills in junior doctors. Associate Professor Anderson is currently a Senior Specialist with ACT Health and works clinically in the area of refugee health.

She is inaugural Chair of the newly created Canberra Region Prevocational Management Committee.